ABOUT US

BOUCHER GUITARS

When it all started in 2005, our dream was to create and develop acoustic guitars whose sound, playability and aesthetics would match the talent of the best guitarists and inspire them. Because our roots were in Berthier-sur-Mer, at the heart of the Appalachians, we also dreamed of enhancing the value of the Picea rubens, commonly known as the Adirondack's red spruce, a rare wood essence which grows abundantly in our splendid region, known worldwide for its exceptional harmonic qualities.

Finally, we dreamed of a high-quality instrument which would bear the name of a goose then reflecting our terroir, where the Picea rubens grows and where snow geese come to rest during their annual migrations.

Therefore, we gathered a team of passionate craftsmen and luthiers around Robin Boucher to make and assemble handcrafted, acoustic guitars with an outstanding sonority. This team, refined and enriched over the years, excels every day with hard work and dedication.

We are creative, and we like to innovate. We were the first to introduce torrefied Picea Rubens soundboards in 2010. Several testimonies from leading specialty magazines and renowned luthiers have called the torrefied soundboard the most significant innovation in the world of high-end acoustic guitar in the last 40 years.

Furthermore, since 2011, we have done more research on the structure and robustness of our guitars, their playability, the comfort of their necks and their overall finish. As a result, we have consistently made improvements to our product without ever sacrificing the sublime sound that characterizes our guitars. The introduction of the new Grande Reserve series, featuring guitars with torrefied flamed maple back and sides, which offer stunning sound properties, is a testament of this relentless pursuit of excellence. Our latest dream is to generate a renewal into the acoustic guitar industry.

... AND YOU KNOW WHAT? WE ARE GETTING THERE!

BLUEGRASSGOOSE

Series

Guitars from our Bluegrass Goose series are crafted and engineered to meet the very high requirements of bluegrass guitarists performing live or in the recording studio. Our guitars offer a large presence on stage due to the method of construction and choices of woods. The Bluegrass Goose guitar is as "present" as all other bluegrass instruments whether you are strumming or soloing! Robin Boucher personally selects Adirondack red spruce for the bracing and soundboard in order to give the instrument its special bluegrass sonority. Rich low ends, driving mids and beefy highs describe the sound spectrum of our Bluegrass Goose. These guitars are incredibly easy to play due to the elevated soundboard radius and the unique profile of the neck which will perfectly match the hand of the guitarist.

DREAMING OF SUCH A GUITAR? WE HAVE IT.

PATRICK NORMAN SIGNATURE Model

The very first artist to visit our workshop and buy one of our guitars was Patrick Norman. During his visit in 2005, Patrick fell for a dreadnought guitar, with cherry wood back and sides that he bought on the spot. In the following months, Patrick would play the guitar at each concert and acted as a proud ambassador for the brand. On September 10, 2016, to celebrate his idol's 60th birthday, Robin offered Patrick an improved version of that guitar. The first Patrick Norman Signature guitar was launched to the artist's and his numerous fans' great delight.

ARTISTS

OUR AMBASSADORS

Music is a universal language and the acoustic guitar is certainly a great instrument for communicating emotions. Great musicians, especially guitarists and singer-songwriters, are always on the lookout for the instrument that will be fully faithful to the emotions they want to convey to their audience. When they find the guitar that does justice to their music, the resulting sound becomes part of who they are artistically. This is why these musicians feel that their guitar becomes for themselves an important source of inspiration and that it allows them to leave an indelible mark on their audience. Over the last decade, many of these artists have testified and continue to show their confidence in Boucher Guitars as they choose the guitar that will bring them to their full creative potential. As a traditional manufacturer of acoustic guitars, we are proud to contribute to their musical success and to the contemporary culture.
